thought, Jens Zimmermann suggests that the west can rearticulate its identity and renew its cultural purpose by recovering the humanistic ethos that originally shaped western culture. He traces the religious roots of renaissance humanism as a revival in the study of classical antiquity at first in Italy and then spreading across Western Europe in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries. Contemporary use of the term humanism is consistent with the historical use prominent in that period, while renaissance humanism is a retronym used to distinguish it from later humanist developments. Humanism began to affect culture and society and powered in large part what we now call the Renaissance humanists operating before Petrarch, called proto-humanists. They were mainly in Italy and included Lovato dei Lovati (1240-1309), a Paduan judge who may have been the first to mix reading Latin poetry with writing modern classical poetry. The classification of religions involves (1) the effort to establish groupings among historical religious communities having certain elements in common or (2) the attempt to categorize similar religious phenomena to reveal the structure of religious experience as a whole. Function and significance of the many schemes suggested for classifying religious communities and religious phenomena all, identification. Papua is probably derived from the Malay word papuwa (fuzzy hair). In 1545, a Spanish explorer called the island Nueva Guinea in 1884; the western half of New Guinea was officially recognized as Dutch New Guinea; the northeastern section became German New Guinea; and the southeastern quarter became British New Guinea. General features: the early modern age witnessed the ascent of Western Europe to global political, economic, and technological dominance. This ascent was gradual, only toward the end of the early modern age did Western power clearly surpass that of rival civilizations. Europe's chief rivals were found in the Middle East (Ottoman Empire), South Asia (Mughal Empire), and East Asia (Ming China). Ibn Warraq was given eight minutes to argue the superiority of Western values. Here is his defense of the West, which forms the basis for his new book Why the West Is Best: A Muslim Apostate's Defense of Liberal Democracy. The great ideas of the West—rationalism, self-criticism, the disinterested search for truth—are strengths of Western culture. In Western culture, individualism is stronger: believing that a human being has an individualistic and independent part of the society and the universe.
